Elin's Soapbox

by Elin Winkler

Once again we've reached that stressful time that is the holiday season. Everyone is rushing around, trying to balance work, family, friends and the dreaded holiday shopping- no wonder everyone is so stressed out! We're working extra hard right now, trying to get caught up on deadlines and get books shipped out to you readers. You may have noticed a little extra slow-down in our production schedule these last few months- due to circumstances beyond our control, a lot of our books were unavoidably delayed. But, fear not, we're already working double-duty to get everything caught back up and on time, and with luck, we'll achieve that goal early in the new year! Thanks to everyone for being so patient!

This hiccup in our production schedule initially had me really worried. I fretted endlessly about things I had no control over, agonized about the amount of work it was going to take to get back on schedule, and all but gnashed my teeth at how hard it was all going to be. Then I happened to watch a documentary about legendary fantasy artist Frank Frazetta. For those who don't know him, Frazetta is the man behind some of the most gorgeous fantasy paintings in the world, and not only that, is a nice guy to boot. Later in his life, he suffered not one, but two strokes, which left him unable to paint or draw with his right hand.

A tragedy, yes. But did that stop Frazetta? No, it didn't. Through sheer force of will and determination, he painstakingly taught himself how to draw using his left hand! Even though everyone expected him to be down for the count art-wise, Frazetta came back and surprised everyone with his tenacity, his drive and his talent. He truly is one of the greats in the world of art. I was stunned, since I'd had no idea that all of Frazetta's current works were being done with his other hand.

Now, our production problems in no way meant we were going to be down for the count. They'd cause us a lot of extra work and perhaps be a little annoying and stressful. But our ability to still make comics for our readers to enjoy wasn't hampered in the slightest. We were by no means going to be stopped by something so little- especially not since making comics, while a difficult and tiring job, is a job we love doing. So, with that, I stopped worrying about the work and just started doing it, and sure enough, we're almost completely caught up again. So, there's my holiday message to everyone out there- if you just dive in and start doing, there's no limit to what you might be able to accomplish. Stop worrying about the little things, and just concentrate on doing whatever it is you do to the best of your abilities. Not only will you surprise the people around you, you might surprise yourself!

Here's hoping you all have a happy holiday, whichever one you celebrate.
